Where is my project?

If you can't find a project, there are a few possible explanations:

- The project is a Preliminary Engineering project and not slated for construction yet. These projects are displayed on a separate map that can be toggled to on the project page by clicking on the "Preliminary Engineering" tag on the top of the map.
- The project is actually on two or more routes. This website only displays the primary project route, so for example a project on US-54 and US-400 will only show up on the US-54 search and not the US-400 search.
- The project is not a T-WORKS project. The site only contains projects that began after July 1st 2010.
- The project is on a city street. The site only contains projects that are either on a state highway or that KDOT plays and administrative role. Most city street and county road projects will not be found on this site.
- There is a mistake. If you think a project is missing or if you find an error, please let us know on the Contact page.

Why doesn't my project show up on the map?

Projects administered on behalf of local governments aren't coded into the KDOT mapping database. Other projects aren't on the road system at all, such as airport and transit projects. We are working to improve this and hope to get all of these projects on to the map eventually.

Why don't the dollars on the Investment page and the Project page add up?

Both the numbers on the Investment page and the $8M Promise page include direct payments from the state to local governments, such as the Special City County Highway Fund and City Connecting Link payments. These are not tied directly to projects and therefore don't show up on the project page.
